The First Train Through the Longest Tannel in the United States-the Hoosac.

[Correspondence of the Boston Advertiser, February 9.] The train consisted of an engine, two or three empty flat cars, one car loaded with gers occupied the engine and tender and all the cars except that loaded with coal, which, I believe, was not occupied. Shortly after 3 o'cleck we left the station, receiving a feeble cheer from those present who did not go, answered by a cheerful yell by the lucky passengers. At ten minutes past 3 the engine entered the dismal hole. In the box car, where your correspondent enjoyed the rare coal, and one pox treight-car. The passenluxury of a seat on a trunk, there was as much to be seen as could be seen anywherethat is, nothing. By holding out one of the two or three lanterns that cast a sickly light over the company one could discern the uninteresting and very monotonous wall of rock, but, there was nothing to excite comment except the curious effect upon the lungs of a mixture of the smoke from the wood burned by the engine with that of the countless cigars and pipes in the mouths of passengers. There were but two incidents on the route: First, when the central shaft was passed, and it became evident to everybody that we were on the down grade; the other, when, having very nearly reached the west portal, the engine came to a dead stop, and the skilful but unlearned engineer in charge of the machine cried out, at the top of his lungs, "Open them doors." As may be known, the western end has always been closed by two immense wooden doors, and the great men who stood guard were forced to

This was not much, but really it was all there is to tell of the half-hour's journey through the Hoosac mountain. The track through the tunnel is of steel. At present it is merely propped up with rocks so as to make it safe for construction trains to pass over it without bending the rails or running off the track. Nevertheless, the train passed over it at a good rate of speed, in some parts of the tunnel reaching the rate of twenty miles an hour, and it seemed so smooth after the the morning's experience that one could hardly help wishing that the State would take out the ballasting of its line west of Greenfield and prop the rails on rocks. It is not expected that any passenger cars will run through the tunnel for some time yet. In certain partsof it pieces of loose lock have fallen-not Office corner of Tenth and Bank streets. within a month or more, it is true, but there is still some little risk, and the wise course has been taken of allowing no others but workmen-to-day was an exception, of course-to pass through. A serious accident. which is certainly more than possible, would give the tunnel a bad reputation, which it would require years of successful operation to overcome.

The Intelligence of Animals-A Story of a Dog and a Jackdaw. IFrom the New York Evening

On the morning of the day following Christmas, four years ago, the porter of the Messrs. Root, Anthony & Co., No. but burglars had been at work. Keys had been at work, Keys had been fitted to the outside locks, on the eve of a holiday, so that the robbets had an entire day Sunday and two bots had 62 Liberty street, on opening the front door bers had an entire day Sunday and two nights in which to work. Once inside the building, they were met with the unexpected difficulty of deciding which of the five sales before them contained the prize. For-tunately, the burglars began operations on a the safe's before them contained the prize. Fortunately, the burglars began operations on a safe which probably never contained a cent of mosey, being evidently attracted by its gran appearance and the fact that it was hidden away in a dark corner of the store.

PHICANX INSURANCE COMPANY, of BrookPORTSMOUTH INSURANCE COMPANY, of PORTSMOUTH INSURANCE COMPANY A vast amount of labor was wasted upon this old safe, and the rage and disappointment of the robbers when they found out their mistake were vented upon the harmless books and papers which it contained. They then began work on another safe, which contained in those times of revenue stamps what was equivalent to $17,000 in greenbacks. Adjoining the store of Messrs. Root, Anthony & Co lives in his bachelor-rooms the well known restaurant-keeper Mr. Sutherland, who at the time had a pet jackdaw that was more than usually amusing by his arties. He was ever ready to eatch pennies, pick up brilliant trifles, or indulge in mis-chief of any kind. From some cause, either a sudden gleam of intelligence or his chronic desire to meddle in every one's business, early in the morning the jackdaw, with loud cries and screams, darted out the window into the back yard of Root, Authory & Co. The easiest way for Mr. Suther-hard to obtain his pet was through the stere in which the burglars were still at work, and as he thought he bad heard noises on the premises, which he presumed were made by the porter, he stepped into the street and tried the store-door. At the same time he saw a man' a few yards off move uneasily away. After vigorously shaking the door and hearing no response, he returned to his own premises and sent a man to climb over the wall into the rear of the adjoining premises and capture the jackdaw that so provokingly kept beyond reach. The burglars, now satisfied that they were discovered, precipitately fled, locking the door after them; and thus the $17,000 of revenue stamps were saved to their owners.

On last Christmas morning Mr. Sutherland was disturbed in his sleep by the most extraordinary conduct of his pet dog Vie, a little fox terrier, a great favorite, and unusually intelligent. This little creature after business hours has the run of the entire interior of the building. On the morning alluded to Mr. Sutherland was awakened by Vic, who officiously poked his cold nose into his master's face, for which presumed impertinence he was brushed on the floor. The dog, however, instantly returned to the charge, and very carnestly began opening his master's eyes with his toenails. This brought Mr. Sutherland to his feet and senses, and also to the consciousness that he was partly suffocated by a hot smoke that filled the room. Instantly comprehending his danger he gave the alarm, when examination showed that the fire was under the floor of the printing-office of the adjoining building, occupied by Messrs. Root, Anthony & Co., which fire was soon extinguished by the local patrol, and with, comparatively speaking, a nominal less. alluded to Mr. Sutherland was awakened by with, comparatively speaking, a nominal
